Public Domain?

Public Domain
An author's works is protected for a term that is generally measured by life of the author plus fifty years. If the author as been dead for fifty years, the work moves into the public domain.

Is the Material Your Own?

Unpublished Course Notes

If you are the sole author, and the work has not been published elsewhere under a limiting agreement, you are the copyright-holder and may use it as you please. If you are not the author, please be aware that unpublished works are still copyrighted, and permission must be obtained.

Licensed by Creative Commons?

Licensed by Creative Commons
Authors/creators use a Creative Commons license to give the public permission to share and use their creative works under conditions specified by the author. (i.e. "Some Rights Reserved")

Licensed Online Resource?

Licensed Online Resources
BCIT licenses many online resources for its staff, faculty, and current students including online journals, eBooks and other types of information.

Best practice:
Post a persistent link to licensed material (i.e. "permalink")

A Journal Article or Book Chapter?

An Article or Chapter
Cite material used. Copies must include a credit to the author and source of the materials; include a clearly visible notice on the materials . For example:

"This copy is made solely for your personal use for research, private study, education, criticism or review only. Further reproduction, distribution, transmission, dissemination, or any other uses, may be an infringement of copyright if done without securing the permission of the copyright owner."

The Internet?

Websites, images, videos, blogs, etc.
In general, if assessed as "Fair Dealing," materials that are freely available on internet can be reproduced for educational purposes.

Check the website's 'Terms of Use', or 'Legal Notices' for specific restrictions or notice that you must have permission from copyright owner to copy and make available to multiple users.

Digital Media?

DVDs, CD-Rom
Purchasing or owning a physical work or physical object, does not give the purchaser any Intellectual Property rights that the copyright owner has.

Purchasers are limited in what they can do by specific terms and conditions of use (i.e. copy to shared drive or laptop?)
Check for visible notice on materials or the "Terms of Use."
